From the Archives

Introducing: From the Archives

Each week we will feature a blog post, article, video or podcast from our archives that has lasting relevance today.

Scripts & Dialogues - Part I Question 1:

How do I answer the "tell me about yourself" question succinctly, without getting into TMI (too much information)?

Great question! You definitely need a succinct one-liner for potential employers or networking conversations that does not wade into TMI territory. At the same time, you will want to be specific about your career goals. Below are four examples, including one for making a career transition, two for returning to the same field as before, and one after a very long career break.

Note: depending on the context, you may or may not want to say why you took a career break or how long it was. Sometimes you may want to leave those details out.

The Script: introducing yourself succinctly:

“I was an international business development manager, and after a career break to care for my children, am now interested in a strategy role in education.”

“I worked in corporate finance, took a [11 year] career break and am interested in returning to a financial analyst role.”

“I spent my entire career in fundraising and development in the non-profit sector before taking a career break and am looking to return to exactly what I left.”

“I was a software developer for 10 years and then took a 22 year career break. I just finished a 9 month iOS development course and am eager to get back into a software engineering role.”
